true greatness

By Brian Maitland

One of my fave players of all-time comes out with an autobio that just fits exactly the way he played. It's a cool, calm, composed, honest look at a life in hockey, and I have even greater respect for his career and the man himself after reading this. The knee injuries alone just leave my mind boggled as to how he was able to play at such a high level all those seasons. It also explains his style of play that was more controlled (think Nicklas Lidstrom but tougher) as he aged.

Also, some gems were getting to know how as a young 24-year-old defenseman reacted to all the craziness of the '72 Summit Series as well as learning more about those late '70s to early '90s Boston Bruins teams. It was also interesting to note how Park was one of the early voices to question Alan Eagleson's involvement in the slush funds the Canada Cups became (as well as all the other scams the guy pulled as NHLPA head).

Plus if you thought the Toronto Maple Leafs were a messed-up organization back in the Harold Ballard era, wait till you read about Park's trip (during his junior Marlies' days when the Laffs owned the junior team in Toronto) to the emergency ward and subsequent trip to see the Leafs' team doctor (who it turned out was a gynecologist!).

Very happy with this book - 70's Bruin's fan

By Bo Diddley

Saw this book when I bought Sanderson's new book. The Boston Bruins were huge in the 70's when I was a kid growing up in the suburbs (woods & ponds) outside of Boston. I remember the 10 games with Orr & Park on the powerplay. Obviously we didn't know it would be just 10 games. Best powerplay point pair ever. I remember the tough losses against the Canadians. All this stuff is in the book and lots more. Great addition to my Boston Bruin's books collection (along with Ted Green, Derek Sanderson, Bobby Orr). Thanks Brad!

The Bradster

By Richard Nelson

So, didn't read the book, but I'm sure it's great-like the man himself. Anyhow, I'm on the train back to Long Island with my friends having just been freaked out by seeing The Exorcist in(?) 1974. A voice from the seat behind us says "You're mother s@&ks c£¥k in hell," a quote from the movie. I turn around, and it's Brad Park. What a nice guy. Funny, approachable, just adding to the fun and conversation. Yeah, one of the game's great, but I have a feeling, (more importantly), a GREAT guy too. Buy the book already.
